Maryland World-Readiness Standards for Learning Languages

As a nation we are increasingly aware of our interdependence with diverse cultures and the need for a citizenry that is linguistically and culturally prepared to participate in the world community both inside and outside our borders. Learners must be able to communicate in other languages at higher levels of proficiency and with greater cultural competence than ever before. The Maryland World-Readiness Standards for Learning Languages provide a roadmap to prepare learners to be citizens of the world in order to be successful participants in the global workforce. This is the core principle of college-, career-, and world-readiness.

Why Do We Need New Standards?

Maryland's initial world language standards were adopted in 2009, as a response to the No Child Left Behind Act of 2001, which included world languages as one of the core academic subject areas. In the interim, several changes have occurred at both the state and national levels. These changes include the introduction of the Maryland College and Career-Ready Standards in 2010, a refreshed version of our National World Language Standards in 2014, and the rapid advancements in technology that have brought the languages and cultures of the world into our classrooms. Thus, Maryland's world language standards have been refreshed to reflect these changes.

Alignment to National Standards

In 2014, the American Council on the Teaching of Foreign Languages (ACTFL) refreshed its 1996 Standards for Foreign Language Learning to reflect best practices of 21st century learning and the Common Core (known in Maryland as College and Career-Ready Standards). The World Language Standards and the English Language Arts Common Core Standards are directly aligned as outlined in this crosswalk document.

ACTFL has also published several supporting documents in the past few years that inform teacher practice, such as the Proficiency Guidelines \(2012\), Performance Descriptors \(2012\), and the NCSSFL/ACTFL Can-Do Statements \(2013\).

Shifts in World Language Teaching and Learning

The principles of 21st century learning have shifted the focus of world language curriculum and pedagogy from learning about the language to authentically engaging in the language. Communication (oral/written/signed) and culture are the organizing principles of today's language learning. The emphasis is on the student being an active participant in real-life situations, by means of authentic materials, tasks, audiences, and evidence. Teachers and students are encouraged to achieve 90% or more target language use. Students measure their progress using Can-Do statements for their proficiency level. Maryland's World-Readiness Standards for Learning Languages, as well as the accompanying documents provide a broad framework that assists world language educators transform their instruction to guide their learners to demonstrate how they are able to function in their new languages across the levels of proficiency.

How to Use This Document

The Maryland World-Readiness Standards for Learning Languages provide a broad framework for local education agencies to develop curriculum, thematic units of study, lesson plans, and performance assessments. Benchmark statements and sample performance indicators are written in student-friendly terms to clearly define what students can do with the language.

The Maryland World-Readiness Standards for Learning Languages mirror the Refreshed National Standards in both content and organization. The 5Cs of Language Learning - Communication, Cultures, Connections, Comparisons, and Communities – are defined as Goal Areas. Each Goal Area contains distinct Content Standards, which describe the knowledge and abilities that all students should acquire. Global Statements describe how well learners are able to use language as they improve their performance from the Novice to the Advanced ranges of proficiency. Below the set of global statements for each level of proficiency are Sample Indicators, which are suggested statements of how students can demonstrate their knowledge of that standard in the target language. Educators are able to customize these Sample Indicators for the content of each unit of study.

The Communication Goal Area (Standards 1.1 - 1.3) is delineated as Interpersonal, Interpretive Listening, Interpretive Reading, Presentational Speaking, and Presentational Writing. This Goal Area reflects the Common Core strands of Reading, Writing, Listening and Speaking. It further aligns to the Common Core strand of Language that outlines proficiency levels with three key benchmarks achieved by learners given sufficient instruction over time: Novice, Intermediate, and Advanced.

The Cultures, Comparisons, Connections, and Communities Goal Areas (Standards 2.1 - 5.2) are also embedded within each of the ELA Common Core Anchor Standards. For a clearer explanation of how the two sets of guidelines align, see the Alignment of the National Standards for Learning Languages with the Common Core State Standards.

The Maryland World-Readiness Standards for Learning Languages are organized by proficiency level. The following graphics approximate the exit proficiency expectations for grade spans PreK-5, Grades 6-8, and Grades 9-12. Please note that instructional hours may vary for FLES and middle school programs based on the structure of the program, the developmental levels of the students, and multiple entry points across the PreK-12 spectrum.
